

anything
but work
abw

BLONDE AMBITION: Two creative talents have brought their love for the performing arts to the northwest

Bringing out best in youth

MARNIE LUDGATE

SIZE certainly doesn't denote the creative clout of a dynamic northwest duo who are driving a youth passion for theatre and film.

Two Small Blondes founders Renata Einhaus and Amanda Hardwick will officially open their performing arts and creative film production school in Alderley on October 10 after securing a permanent home for their burgeoning business.

Einhaus said they had three-year-old students learning to dance and 18-year-olds flourishing under their film and theatre courses, where students enjoyed the thrill of seeing their self-written and directed short films professionally edited and shown at local cinemas.

Hardwick has more than 15 years experience as a performer in film, television and theatre while Einhaus has a design and technical background for events, theatre, film and television.

The friends of 15 years have combined to put young Brisbane talent at the forefront of the performing arts industry.

"I am a firm believer that as human beings we learn the best through doing," Hardwick said.

"We not only provide, but we demand a space where students can make mistakes, without embarrassment and fear, and achieve their goals."

■ Two Small Blondes will host free acting, dance and film making workshops and a barbecue at their opening day on October 10, 10am to noon at 26 Progress Rd, Alderley.

SHE SAID IT

AMANDA HARDWICK
Two Small Blondes

I am a firm believer that as human beings we learn the best through doing.

WIN $10,000 towards a Home Makeover

Plus a $500 Home Makeover to be won in each participating title.

You have the chance to win $10,000 towards a makeover of your home. In addition one lucky reader from each newspaper will win a $500 voucher to spend at a participating business in their local area. It is that simple. See the TrueLocal section of this paper for details.

Terms and conditions apply. Please visit www.questnews.com.au for terms and conditions.

A division of Nationwide News Pty.Ltd. ABN 98 008 438 828